Chapter 1 by Lance Felix

I think it's getting dark outside. The blue-ish fluorescent lights along the hallway are already on, buzzing like a cage of robotic bees, but thankfully the tall doors all round are still closed.

Shit, the stench is getting worse. I need to deal with this, and fast. Someone could be here any minute.

Chapter 2 by Lance Felix

I wasn't prepared for this at all. I thought I had been, but in reality this stuff is almost impossible to pull off, and that's without a building full of witnesses. I kept forgetting where I had put this and that, and when I left I panicked because I thought my wallet was gone, but then I remembered that I left it at home.

I'm sweating like a pig right now, and panting too. I didn't have time to clean everything up, but at least I made sure nothing was left behind. Now I have to get the body to the lake without people noticing. I already have the route memorized and the car right outside... But goddamnit, it's so much heavier than I thought.

Chapter 3 by SaintSayaka

Still, I manage. Nobody seems to mention a thing about my guitar case. In such a sketchy neighborhood, maybe they're just used to it.

Or maybe this mercenary business is easier than I thought.

I sit on the edge of this lake, contemplating before doing the deed. It makes it a little better, knowing that the body inside this case had molested five children. Well, not BETTER, per say. Justified. May he rest poorly within his cheap coffin and the three one ton rocks I've tossed in with him.

And evidently, he is resting poorly, because I hear three very loud rasps from within the case.
